

The following request for support, written by Peggy McIntosh, was forwarded to WACAN by Eddie Moore, Jr.

Dear Friends,

A film student at NYU named Aislinn Dewey has created a 2 and 1/2 minute animation based on some of my examples of white privilege. I've worked with her to make some edits and changes and am fairly pleased with the result. The video has passed the first hurdle at WGBH in a Black History Month contest. Its next test is basically a popularity contest among viewers who are invited to comment on it and give it a grade, from 1 to 5. The winning selection may appear on WGBH TV or on their website, but the piece was specifically designed for the small screen -- youtube, ipod, and other mobile devices.

If you will please view Aislinn's animation video, following the link below, and make a comment and/or give it a grade, this will help her in the contest and increase the chances that this piece gets widely viewed.

FYI: I can't open the link on my own computer. If you also cannot, try pasting this website address into your web browser address line to go directly to the website of the contest:

<http://lab.wgbh.org/open-call-sample-reels/privilege>.

If you can't watch it, see if you can download or update Quicktime from the web so that you can view it.

Thank you.

All for now,
Peggy McIntosh

The White Privilege Conference is April 2-5, 2008!
Visit: www.uccs.edu/~wpc/